THURSDAY EVENING. JULY 3, 1879.

THE FETE OF THE PARIS OPERA -The fete of the opera, or rather that of the Figaro, given for the benefit of the Hungarian sufferers, took place last Saturday. It was a great pecuniary success, some $50,000 having been netted for the cause. The external decorations of the Opera House were very pretty, a calcium light having been placed within the point of the heavy cor-nice of the facade, so as to throw a vivid silvery nice of the facade, so as to throw a vivid silvery radiance on the crowning group of the edifice—Apollo with Terpsichore and Euterpe. Thus illuminated, the graceful forms stood out against the dusky sky with a very charming effect

Every window in the vast edifice was abisze with lights, while around it the Jablockeff lamps floeded the night with their moonlight lustre. Within, the crowd was prodigious, in spite of the high prices charged for tickets. The amusements of the evening comprised a concert, led by the leading musicians of Paris, a farandole danced by the corps de ballet of the opers, a fancy fair at which the saleswomen were the prettiest actresses of the day, and, finally, a lottery and suction sale. At the latter, a drawing by Boldini went for $320, and a sketch by Vibert for $600.

The Prince of Wales was present and made bert for $600.

The Prince of Wales was present and made numerous purchases, scattering his gold about with his usual lavish good nature. Yet, taken altegether, the fete cannot be pronounced a social success. The "upper ten," so far as the female element was concerned, was chiefly noticeable by its absence, and the "lower million," as able by its absence, and the "lower million," as represented by the demi-monde, had it all their own way. "Shockingly mixed, the set at the fiste do l'Opera the other night, I am to'd," remarked a gentleman to a friend at the Grand Prix the next day. "Mixed! not at all," was the reply; "the company was all of one sort.—
